

What the sun and moon did..

Author: Swetha Prakash

Illustrators: Greystroke, Helga Parekh, Sonal Goyal, Sumit Sakhuja

Level 1

Once upon a time, the river was full of stones. There was no water on earth and because there was no water there was no life on earth. There were no animals and no plants. There were only inanimate things like rocks and stones and mountains and deep pits. The sun and moon felt very lonely.

The sun asked a moon for a part of her cold body. The moon gave round crusts of her skin to the the sun and this is how craters formed on her surface. The sun melted the round skin of moon with her heat and what came out was water. This water fell on earth and life came into being.
